Praise for the police Antonio Moreno, a resident of the city who has been in the United States for more than 30 years, said the police patrol the city 24 hours a day. "They run a tight ship," he said. "I've seen them in tight spots. They have it under control." In addition to the police, Moreno praised the city for its public works department. "They mow the yards and make sure every yard gets mowed," he said. "And they keep the streets clean, whether it's residential or commercial." Treating each other with respect Jeanette Harper, 79, said she has always enjoyed living in Warren because the city is quaint. "It's small-town America," she said. "I enjoy the city. It has its ups and downs." Harper, an employee of the public works department, also noted a vast improvement in the city's public transit system. "I think the bus service is good," she said. "I haven't had an incident with a bus driver, even though I ride the bus to work and everywhere I go. They all just treat people with respect." Mister Peanuts Warren resident Tony Fisher, a resident for eight years
